ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

AMONG the numerous persons who helped me in the course of this study, I am especially indebted to Lawrence H. Seltzer, Daniel M. Holland, and Ralph Nelson of the National Bureau research staff. Their advice and critical comments after reading the entire manuscript resulted in many improvements over the original text. Special thanks are due to Robert E. Lipsey and Joseph A. Pechman. Lipsey gave freely of his time in helping me adopt appropriate statistical procedures. Pechman generously advised me on many occasions on problems involving sources and concepts in connection with Chapter 2. At various stages of its development the manuscript was reviewed critically by Percival F. Brundage, Harold M. Groves, Hal B. Lary, Geoffrey H. Moore, Norman B. Ture, and Joseph H. Willits.

No study of this type would be possible without frequent assistance from government agencies and their personnel. Although in the present case I relied primarily on published data compiled from tax returns by the Statistics Division of the Internal Revenue Service, additional detail and explanation were frequently supplied by Ernest J. Engquist, the Division's director, and Helen F. Demond. Much help was also obtained from persons in the Commerce Department's National Income Division, especially Jeanette Fitzwilliams and the late Selma F. Goldsmith.

Behind the tables in this study are many hours of computations ingeniously performed by Mary H. Faden, Kathryn S. Marin, Irving Miller, and Joan Tron. H. Irving Forman skillfully drew the charts. Joan Tron not only had a part in the statistical work but also served as the manuscript's able editor.

The responsibility for such errors as still remain is as always the author's.
