
Acknowledgments

This conference was generously supported by a grant from the New York Stock Exchange to the National Bureau of Economic Research. Throughout the conference's two-year planning phase and over the past twelve months when the conference volume was being assembled, I have benefited enormously from the advice and help of many individuals.

Jim Shapiro was a tremendous resource on whom I drew frequently, and was among the few believers who shared my ambitious vision for this conference right from the very start. He and his colleagues at the NYSE, especially Jim Cochrane and George Sofianos, gave generously of their time and energy at every stage, providing historical data, industry contacts, and other resources to many of the conference participants. Without their enthusiasm and tireless efforts, this conference would not have been the success that it was.

I am also grateful to Bob Merton, whose research on the functional approach to financial regulation first sparked my interest in this area, and with whom I discussed many aspects of this conference over countless lunches at his expense.

The NBER has been an ideal forum for promoting interest in this new and exciting research area, and Geoff Carliner and Marty Feldstein have been invaluable sources of support and encouragement at every turn.

And as usual, Kirsten Foss Davis, Lauren Lariviere, and the other members of the NBER conference department must be congratulated for planning and executing yet another flawless conference—they made my job so easy, I wonder if my title of “conference organizer” isn't a misnomer.

Deborah Kiernan, Marc London, and Cristina McFadden of the NBER publications department and Anita Samen of the University of Chicago Press provided excellent support in turning ten manuscripts and twenty discussants' comments into this wonderful conference volume.

Finally, I would like to thank all the preconference and conference participants for taking time from their very busy schedules to take part in this unprecedented gathering of economists, regulators, lawyers, and practitioners. While academics think nothing of sequestering themselves for days on end to deliberate on issues large and small, those from other walks of life are usually not so inclined. That almost all of the conference participants attended the full three days of sessions (I did take attendance)—in a conference room with no windows—is a testament to the intense interest and excitement that they themselves have generated. This book is a worthy tribute to their contributions.
