

RAND's Bing Center for Health Economics invites applications to its Visiting Scholars Program.

Visiting scholars will spend a minimum of 1 and up to 4 weeks in residence at RAND in either Santa Monica or Washington D.C. During their stay, the scholar will present a seminar on a health economics topic. The Program will cover travel and housing expenses, and will provide an honorarium of $1,000 per week. It will also facilitate interactions between the scholar and health economists throughout the organization. The program is targeted towards economists at the associate and full professor levels but promising junior scholars are also encouraged to apply.

Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis and the period of the stay will be decided in collaboration with accepted applicants.

To apply, please submit a CV along with a cover letter that includes (a) a one paragraph description of the work that will be presented and (b) a proposed period of stay. Applications and related questions can be e-mailed to Nancee Inouye at inouye@rand.org.

If you know of any economists who would be interested in this program, please encourage them to apply. For more details on the program, please e-mail Mireille Jacobson at mjacobso@rand.org.
