Acknowledgments

This book is part of a multiyear project on nonprofits at the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER). I was a relative latecomer to this project; essentially, I came in as a pinch editor for R. Glenn Hubbard. Glenn, Martin Feldstein, and an anonymous donor are the true parents of this book. Glenn was the original ringleader of the project, and he would have edited this volume if he had not gone to serve as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors. His intellectual fingerprints are everywhere in this volume and he deserves much credit for making this book happen.

Martin Feldstein not only was one of the originators of this project, but was an intellectual guide throughout the book's development. His wisdom and vast understanding of this subject area have been enormously helpful. Finally, an anonymous donor contributed both financially and intellectually. This donor ultimately deserves credit for the existence of this book.

A number of discussants at the conference where this material was originally presented improved the volume. David Cutler, Jerry Green, Thomas Hubbard, Fiona Scott Morton, Sendhil Mullainathan, Antoinette Schoar, and Bruce Weinberg all gave excellent comments. I am especially grateful to Jerry Green and to an anonymous reviewer, both of whom read through the entire manuscript and made helpful suggestions.

I am also grateful to the NBER staff, particularly Helena Fitz-Patrick and Brett Maranjian, for their invaluable help at making this happen. I would have been lost without them. Finally, I would like to thank Nancy Schwartz for her gentle support and sage guidance.

This book is not formally dedicated to anyone, but I like to think of this book as a thank-you note to our nonprofit employers. All of the authors in this volume are part of the nonprofit sector and we all have been treated well by that sector. In a sense, this volume is a chance to give something back to the universities and other nonprofit organizations (especially the NBER) that trained us and that continue to provide a supportive and stimulating atmosphere in which we can investigate our world.
